WE CONGRATULATE NEW YORK, the country at large, and more especially the ladies of the Sorosis and kindred organizations, upon the election of our handsome and be witching Mayor to be one of the vice presidents of the St. Louis Convention. THE EXHIBITION.

The Happy Family of the Centennial Celebration.

THE PARROT AND THE MONKEY.

The Latest Charge Against the Board of Finance.

PHILADELPHIA, June 27, 1876. One of the pleasantest exhibitions which the Hon. Mr. P. T. Barnum provided for the entertainment of the public, was undoubtedly the Happy Family, and many of your readers will recall it with wonder and delight. In the large cage which adorned his many museums, each of which was finer than any of the others, Mr. Barnum had assembled animals of the most different tastes and inclinations. dogs with a taste for cats, cats with a taste for par-rots, parrots with a taste for rabbits, rabbits with an doves which cooled on the necks of porcu-pines which bristled with universal hatred, anacondas whose natural appetites for white mice were controlled by a sense of morality, and profound respect mals, so opposite in their natures, dwelling together in peace, united only by a common respect for the proprietor. The combination was like that of charcoal, saltpetre and sulphur. The elements of charcoal, saltpetre and sulphur. The elements of gunpowder are harmoniously united, and nothing but a spark of fire could divorce them in smoke and flame. But this happy family of which I speak, like all happy families, had its spats. Sometimes the old Adam of the original protoplasm from which they were descended would get the upper hand, and dreadful conflicts would ensue. Some unre-generated baboon would pull the tail of a dog, the dog would go for a cat, the cat would revenge itself on a parrot, and the parrot would scream out, "O, Polly put the kettle on, and we'll all have tea," which was the signal for a general Schutzenfest. The quills upon the fretful porcupine would expand porten-tously, the crocodile would open his prodigious jaws wise and virtuous anaconda would, in sheer absence of mind, bolt a few white mice, like Betsy Prig wise and virtuous anaconda would, in sheer absence of mind, bolt a few white mice, like Betsy Prig when in pure unconsciousness she helped berself to a double portion of gin from Saircy Gamp's teapot. Unhappy Happy Family! Squeais, groans, grunts, hissings, barkings and all kinds of howing replace the original tranquility. Then came Mr. Barnum with the moral suasion of a big pole and soon order once more reigned in Warsaw. There is a picture now to be seen in the shop windows, of a monkey on a bed, baid headed and dispicated generally, and a plucked parrot under the bed, which truthfully represents the kind of order which prevailed. THE MONKEY AND THE PARROT.

There is a bappy family at the Centennial Exhibition which bears some laint resemblance to that of which the benevolent Mr. Barnum had so much reason to be proud. I refer to the United States Commission, the Board of Finance, and in part to the City Councils of Philadelphia. To the casual observer, if I may be permitted to introduce a new phrase into the language, these bodies seem to live in perfect harmony, and to love each other as passionately as Mr. Barnum's Jabberwoon loved the jub jub bird, or the jub jub bird the frumious bander-snatch. They say so themselves—these members of the Happy Family of the Centennial. Indeed, it is to be credited to them that they each are sincere in their desire to agree, playided each can have its own way. "I am the most reasonable and quiet man in the world," said Sir Peter Teazle, "provided I am not contradicted." Mr. John Welsh says that there has never been, that there is not, and never will be any serious dispute between the Board of Finance and the United States Commission. Mr. President Hawley and Mr. Director General Gosborn make the same rash assertion. The Hon. Daniel J. Morrel, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Commission, has also given his opinion, and, of course, paints the potrait in rose colors, not like the artist who Hisbrosh in hues of earthquake and selipse.

Yet, unfortunately, all happy families are much alike. There is a skeleton in every closet, and the Centennial skeleton is the irreconcilable conflict between the United States Commission and the Financial Board. The proof of this is found not merely in roumer and general belief, indications of want of sympathy and evidence of jealous watchfuness, but also in the official action of the two great rival heads. The opinions of George W. Biddle, Judgo John K. Porter, of New York, and Judge Shellabarger, of Washington, which the Heraldo last Sunday published for the first time, and the opposite opinions rendered by Charles O'Conor, Mr. Browning and Mr. Hirst prove that both bodies were only a little white ago pretty much in the condition of the monkey and the parol. The Board of Finance obtsimed the legal opinion of Mr. Charles O'Conor and the concerted counsellors that it had supreme practical control of the Exhibition, the grounds and the police, and that the Commission was nothing more than a "supervisory to body," a Mr. Turveydrop, with no more authority body," a Mr. Turveydrop, with no more authority and the parrot. The Board of Finance obtained the legal opinion of Mr. Charles o'Conor and the concurrent counsellors that it had supreme practical control of the Exhibition, the grounds and the police, and that the Commission was nothing more than a "supervisory body." a Mr. Turveydrop, with no more authority than the figure head of a ship has over the captain. Mr. Biddale and his distinguished brethren in the case, on the courary, declared that the Commission was vested by the various acts of Congress with the "exclusive control" of the Exhibition, and that the Board of Finance was virtually no more than a bank required by law to pay the requisitions on the treasury which the Commission might choose to make. This conflict was unfortunate, but that it existed I have given you the proof. That effort has been made to end it is unquestionable, but that it is ended is not yet to be fully believed.

At the close of the Exhibition we shall see the Happy Family rather miserable. An enterprise so grand, so novel and involving so much responsibility is certain to be attended by bluders of management, neglect of detail, extravagance and possibly with abuses of power. When it is terminated, and the accounts which are now concealed are to be rendered the public, the managers are bound to begin a conteas of recrimination. The power is divided, and in the end the two rival heads will seek to shift the responsibility of the blunders on each other. There is a cloud in the Centennial Sky now which may produce a thunder storm next winter. The Board of Finance, when is chiefly a Pinladelphia body, is accused by some of the members of the Centennial Commission of applying the funds of the show not for the benefit of the exhibition buildings are placed. In other words, they assert that the money which was given for the benefit of the Exhibition buildings are placed. In other words, they assert that the money which was successful to the Exhibition and the superbi lamps which are sattered over the grounds, but which are not lightly same time keep the remainder packed up under the customs' seal.

Second—That the wish of foreign exhibitors is to have permission to sell and deliver freely any articles exhibited or otherwise, consistently with keeping intact the importance and effect of their exhibit.

Third—That they are ready and willing to pay duty as often as required, on all goods after their sale is effected, but that it is not in the power of every one, to pay the whole duty beforehand.

Fourth—That the authorities should be asked to promptly reconsider the subject, seeing that more than one-fourth of the valuable period of the Exhibition has already passed, and the great loss of profit to themselves and of duty to the government daily occurring through their inability to sell and in many instances even to show their goods for fear of having their cases scaled, and through the stringent, and in their opinion excessively strict, not to say annoying and degrading, surveillance exercised over them by officers.

Fifth—That all the foreign exhibitors interested in this matter will keep their cases closed and exhibits accorded pending such reduction, which, if it should not prove satisfactory, will oblige many to repack their goods and return home in order to reduce expenses, which have hitherto been a continual and increasing outlay without any proportionate return to cover them and which, unless existing regulations are altered, the do not feel justified in sustaining apart from their com-mental interests for the mere gratification of nations and indiridual enumenton.

opened at ten minutes past three P. M. by the calling of Mr. Henry Boulton, of Lambeth Pottery Works, Loudon, to the chair, and the selection of E. H. Edwards, of Beliast, Ireland, as secretary.

Mr. Doulton, as chairman, inquired if all the groups had been formed, and suggested if they had that they appoint a committee of one, which could form a committee to act upon the matters before them.

The recom, which for the number was very limited, was crowded to its utmost capacity, and the hot weather, acting upon the blood of those present, presented as a consequence a scene of excitement which, at one time, gave indications of serious trouble. The nationalities represented—French, German, Hallan, Spanish, Swiss, American, British and others—were talking loudly and gesticulating to enforce their arguments.

the different countries exhibiting shall proceed forthwith to Washington and prosent the grievances of the foreign exhibitors and confer with the Secretary of the Treasury.

3. That this deputation shall prepare a memorial setting forth the grievances of the foreign exhibitors, their respective commissions being requested to indorse the same.

Mr. Doulton stated that the various commissions who represent the nations should be respected and not gone against in the matter.

Mr. Frazer said that the deputation should prepare the memorial and proceed with it to Washington; he could speak from personal experience and say that he had no doubt they would secure the end for which the meeting had been called together.

Mr. Doulton, from the chair, said that "it had been suggested that the gentlemen named on the committee should, with the Chairman and Secretary of the meeting, be the deputation to prepare and present the same at Washington." The suggestion was adopted.

Mr. Doulton said he had been pleased at the in which they had met. When divided they did not have half the strength which they would have if they went together. He was glad that the customs stringency had not been adverted to. Caim, quiet and unanimous action would have the desired effect.

ARRIVAL OF THE WEST POINT CADETS.

An interesting event at the Exhibition to-day was the arrival of the West Point cadets and their encampment on the grounds. The cadets, 290 in number, comprising the entire roster of the Academy, leaving West Point by the steamer Mary Powell reached Jersey City at about half-past one o'clock P. M. Here they wore transferred to a special train on the Pennsylvania Railroad and landed at four o'clock at the Centennial depot, opposite to the entrance to the grounds. At the time they slighted from the cars a ghower of rain came up and there was a delay until half-past four o'clock before they entered the grounds.

At this hour the line was formed and they marched into the grounds, and they had scarcely formed madden to the ro ment, hear teerings Affin, where every provision had been made for their accommodation.
The cadets were in charge of General Neill, Commandant, assisted by the following tactical officers:—
